

A lot of people experience burnout this time of year – balancing gift-giving, family and work. But in the busyness of the season, we may not notice we are burnt out until burnout's mental and physical symptoms start to surface.

If you take the time to understand your baseline normative levels of functioning and your likely triggers, you are much more likely to be cognizant of when you feel “off” and to recover so you can actually enjoy the warmth of Hanukkah without being burnt by it.

Learn more about burnout and how to treat it with our Hanukkah & burn out resource!

4 QUESTIONS TO FIND YOUR BASELINE

As you sit by the light of the Hanukkah candles, ask yourself:

1

When I notice I am _____, that is a sign I need to take a break or ask for help.

2

What are some things I can do when I notice I am feeling low in energy (physically, emotionally, spiritually)?

3

How much time do I need to be spending alone? With others? How does my level of social energy affect my relationships?

4

Is movement something that energizes me? Is it draining? What do fatigue and exhaustion feel like in my body?
